

A Premier Center for Natural Science
Education in New York City

Since 1972, APEC has been a living-learning center for tens of thousands of children and adults.

Our backdrop is 635 acres of largely undeveloped parkland in New York City. Over 300 species of birds and other wildlife make their home in the park's hilly glacial topography, where they can find one of our city's few precious remnants of old growth woodlands, or the vast wetlands adjoining Little Neck Bay.

Over 60,000 Visitors Come to APEC
Each Year, From All Corners of
New York City and Long Island

Our professional educators reach thousands of area families and community groups each year with innovative, hands-on programs in the environmental sciences. Children and families make APEC the destination of choice for weekend, afterschool, and mid-day courses, clubs, seasonal events and casual walks on our trail.

Adult interest groups and classes of birders, Community Supported Agriculture members, fish hobbyists, astronomy enthusiasts, painters, photographers, and hikers all find a place at APEC.

APEC is renowned for its elementary and middle school enrichment programs. On average, six classes visit APEC each school day, and our staff visits over 50 classes in schools each month—that's nearly 60,000 school-aged children and their teachers and 5,000 accompanying parents who are learning natural sciences and environmental stewardship at APEC every year. We maintain wait lists of teachers who cannot be accommodated because of space limits. Annually, the wait list is more than 10,000 children.
